If the agenda were a feather and the Delegate of Nigeria an arrow, today, at HFS MUN's UNGA, the feather would be slit down the middle, with Nigeria emerging as the victor. "The people of Yemen are not just data and statistics, but human beings with feelings. It is our duty to ensure their voices are heard and their problems alleviated," proclaimed the Delegate of South Korea, charging into the committee like a warrior on a white horse.

The Delegate of Iran inaugurated the tradition of getting barred after he comically raised Afghanistan's placard instead of his own. Germany, much like a commander at war, rallied the delegates to victory by finally proposing a solution, recommending the establishment of an independent UNHRC commission to address the humanitarian violations in the affected region.

Yemen's heart-wrenching speech transported the committee from their cushioned seats into the midst of war: "In Yemen, we've seen the worst of humanity: children bombed in schools, women sexually assaulted in refugee camps, and men tortured in secret prisons. Yet, the world watches, paralyzed by indecision as our people suffer."

-BY MAITHILI KAUTHEKAR, ANANYA SATYANARAYAN AND SOHA SHAH

Feathers, Roses, and Swords

Egypt, contradicting their previous actions of withdrawing mediating troops from Gaza, demanded a ceasefire in Yemen. The EB questioned this, asking them how they expected to implement a ceasefire in another country when they themselves did not support it.

Afghanistan appeared to be the weak link of its bloc, as it was cornered, or rather, bullied by all the remaining countries. The chair intervened to rescue, remarking, "Targeting a delegate who has no relevance is like kicking a dead person: you're asking why they're dead."

Love was in the air as the smell of roses wafted into the committee. The chairs affirmed that love has no gender by commenting, “It’s 2024, guys; love is love.” In the end, bromance triumphed over romance when our chair showed their preference for white roses over the red ones. ‘An eye for an eye makes the whole world blind’, right?

The Delegate of Iran seemed blinded, as he responded to accusations of using the war in Yemen to start a proxy war by accusing Saudi Arabia of doing the same instead of defending its own actions.

“TARGETING A DELEGATE WHO HAS NO RELEVANCE IS LIKE KICKING A DEAD PERSON: YOU’RE ASKING WHY THEY’RE DEAD.”
~ Executive board

As the committee proceeded with forming blocs, Iran found itself as the horse-riding peshwa and a major point of discussion. Opposing Iran seemed to be the trend, with the Pro-Iran bloc having little to no members. Iran was nonchalant about the ordeal, stating, “It does not bother me.” Yemen had some less-than-flattering things to say about the opposite bloc(pro-iran), calling them

“f***** idiots” and giving a special mention to Afghanistan, referring to them as an “a*****”(imagination is a powerful tool).

The UNGA committee, like the quintessential Bollywood film that it was, rose(pun intended) with love, humour, war, drama, and everything in between.

The United Nations Security Council had many principal actors, all of them chasing their own agendas, which would ultimately converge into a single storyline, of isolating the Rapid Support Force.

The delegate of Slovenia claimed that their ambitions were the joint vision of the entire committee, suggesting that peaceful resolutions should be formed in the committee, and the delegate of Egypt was the first to act. His motion to deliberate on the impacts of Disarmament, Demobilization, and Reintegration in the Darfur region was all it took to convert constructive discussion into pure drama.

The delegate of Libya underlined the importance of implementing DDR policies. China's satyas contradicted the delegate of Libya's noble comments. The delegate of China enquired, how a country that trades arms with Sudan can support disarmament. The delegate of Libya was dumbfounded to answer this question, and the silence that followed highlighted the country's hypocrisy, much like asking someone to do something you wouldn't. This pointless bickering would soon emerge into riots

The committee rejected the delegate of Chad's offer of logistical support, as Sudan accused Chad of funding terrorism in Sudan. These accusatory statements eventually had to take a backseat as the gravity of an impending crisis enveloped the room-Highly trained, violent Rapid Support Forces officers had taken over and laid siege to El Fasher in North Darfur, and during a routine inspection in the marketplace in Khartoum, an embassy official, was accidentally shot. Despite there being no official response, sources suggested that the official was Russian.

“IS IT A NUCLEAR FAMILY? NO. IS IT A JOINT FAMILY? NO, IT IS THE RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN RUSSIA AND SUDAN. CONFUSED, COMPLICATED AND ILLEGAL.”- THE DELEGATE OF UK

The delegates of Guyana and China made moving speeches, with China pledging its air surveillance support to eliminate the RSF. The delegate of France openly condemned the RSF and pledged 100 million dollars to support the region in crisis.

These fiery remarks continued from all factions of the committee until the Russian Department of Press finally confirmed the death of Col. Sergei Prozorov. Adding more fuel to the fire 3 desert patrol vehicles of the SPF were intercepted by 12-15 militants of the RSF.

by-shrishti mehra

Russia's alliance with Sudan remained unwavering, as they promised to assist Sudan with troops and aid. Sudan betrayed its own organisation, the RSF in no time, condemning their actions and promising strict sanctions, and threatened to take up arms against them.

The delegate of United Kingdom's views on the matter were controversial, to say the least. Her suggestion that the events that had recently played out were staged by Russia, perhaps to silence someone who knew too much, would engulf the committee in noise.

Every delegate who spoke condemned the RSF. "Lalach ka andhapan akal ke darwaje band kar deta hai" -This is possibly the best way to explain the RSF's actions, as a once divided committee banded together, even the USA and China, to penalise one impulsive, now, "extremist" militia.

By Avani Garg, Sofia Gluckman, and Aarna Ponnappa

“Now you see Palestine's land, now you don't” was the only statement that did come true in today's committee, for Palestine was nowhere to be found. The committee continued yesterday's moderated caucus, where Israel blindly stated that Palestine was manipulating and grooming innocent kids to take part in a war. The EB corrected his statement by saying that Israel funds Hamas, prolonging the war, which is the reason why children are forced to participate in such Gorey activities.

The delegate of the UK sent a bomb to North Korea and our beloved Hamas. They pulled a gun out while stating, “The only language that they understand”. The delegate of Israel started on an impromptu love poem for Iran, following yesterday's punishment, with statements as controversial as the country itself, confirming that maybe friendship is the only foundation for love.

By- Mehek Jeelani

With the committee craving controversy, the delegate of the USA raised a motion to conduct an open floor, which passed with flying colours. Each delegate got a turn to humiliate their enemies. The USA dealt with other frustrating delegates who only seemed to attack their president, going so far as to compare him to ice cream.

Iran and Israel’s hatred for each other led them to say unimaginable things. Israel stated that Iran was addicted to their toxic girlfriend; Iran, furious with such rumours, claimed, “Israel is addicted to their sugar daddy, Hamas.”. Such a statement resulted in Iran being barred for the rest of the open floor. Russia sent a statement to Israel, which sent the committee into shock. Kendrick fans can relate: “Israel, 4 words for you. Certified loverboy, certified slaughterboy”.

After lunch, in the gloomy, dim room, a crisis was announced, declaring a new Hamas President, Sheikh Rasgollah. The committee was filled with echoing silence when a group of NSAs showed up, a hostage in their hands.

They announced their claims: the Middle East should be declared a WMD-free zone and all Israeli-occupied Palestinian land should be given back to Palestine, leaving the delegates utterly puzzled and in shock. “What happens in a crisis?” said a delegate, a breath of fresh air and blatant stupidity in the tense atmosphere.

“Israel, 4 words for you. Certified loverboy, certified slaughterboy”

After a round of interrogations, the delegates started the SSL, with Israel asserting that it is not a nuclear power. The delegate made a contradictory statement, claiming in less than fifteen minutes to have made "history" as a permanent nuclear state, using nuclear weapons for peace, breaking the NPT, and lying to the committee. Well, they caught you! "Delegates! Israel is a liar!" the delegate of Hamas said in a sing-song voice, sending Israel into an ultimate spiral, though he deserved a second chance. Quickly, Hamas began a speech addressing the cause of the crisis, replying "yes" when asked about peace negotiation efforts.

Judging from how much they screamed and embarrassed other delegates, they must have had a great time on the second day. India stood up to show his hatred towards the USA (literally). Proposals abound, including covert admissions made to the chair who began arguing, "You are cheating on me!" Love was in the air at DISEC, contrasting the usual war and debate.

Oh, how my heart skips after looking at your “bleach blonde, bad built butch body.” Your physique reminds me of America, fat and flamboyant, a true testament to the American Dream.

Your ability to transform the mundane into the criminal is truly an art form. Every felony you commit is like a brushstroke on the canvas of your legacy, a legacy filled with chaos and confusion. Who else could turn a simple tweet into a national crisis? Only you, Donald, only you. Your linguistic genius—Covfefe. A word so profound, it has left scholars baffled and linguists in awe. It’s like you’ve created your language, a secret code that only you and possibly a few extraterrestrials understand. Every time I hear it, I imagine you hunched over your phone, channelling your inner Shakespeare, penning words that will echo through history, or at least through late-night comedy shows. Your dedication to nepotism is heartwarming. It’s like watching a family sitcom where everyone gets a starring role, regardless of talent or experience. Keeping it all in the family—how quaint and charming! Ivanka, Jared, Don Jr.—it’s like the Kardashian clan, but with more subpoenas.

Your dedication to turning every controversy into a headline is a lesson in media manipulation. The way you’ve leveraged scandal and intrigue to keep the press on its toes is truly a masterclass in modern politics. The fact that you’ve managed to make each day an exercise in extreme unpredictability is both impressive and exhausting.

Your legacy, whether it’s admired or reviled, will certainly be memorable. You’ve ensured that history will remember you not just for what you did, but for the relentless spectacle you turned politics into.

“If you believe Hamas is in the wrong then let other big power countries airstrike your country and eradicate the terrorist organisation” - The Executive Board of HFS MUN’s UNHRC actively questioned Palestine on day 2 of the conference following their speech, where they denied any relation to the non-state actor organisation Hamas and their methods.

While other countries suggested amendments to improve international cooperation, Cuba spoke about their funding of Palestine and how they would continue such efforts. On the other hand, Israel reminded everyone that from the beginning they have been showing cooperation, they agreed not only to a ceasefire but also to provide humanitarian aid to Palestinian civilians. “Where is the demand for accountability on the other side?” were the words that echoed through the hall as the Delegate of the State of Israel urged the others to hold all parties answerable for their actions. On this note, the delegates found themselves in a beautiful love triangle of contemplation and confusion, switching their stance on who the victim was- Israel or Palestine.

The EB had to put all other things on hold when they came across THE chit. It seemed that the delegate of the Republic of Slovenia, while present to discuss the agenda being academic freedom, ended up being educated on the correct spelling of Moderated Caucus. The EB pointed out, “The spelling is C-A-U-C... sir”, disappointed with the delegate’s questionable spelling. Slovenia se galti se mistake ho gaya! Following that, the delegate of the Republic of Sudan proposed a familiar solution by asking, “What’s a more effective solution than something that has been tried and tested”, referring to the South African Reconciliation Commission by Nelson Mandela

India tried to sympathise with the committee, painting the picture, “Imagine a Palestinian father screaming, ‘save my child!’”, making Israel look like a khaandani chor. Shortly after, the EB suspended all other discussions and took a poll, “Was the USA bombing Japan justified?”. None of USA’s allies agreed, and even Israel went against their most dear ally and showed disapproval of their actions. Surprised by the quick decision of the committee the EB had to remind everyone who the real superpower is!

“ WAS THE USA BOMBING JAPAN JUSTIFIED? ” .

For the last moderated caucus of the day, The EB brought on the heat, making the delegates’ mouths run dry, despite the hearty dal makhani from lunch! Multiple jabs were taken at the delegates, one of which was directed at the delegate of the State of Israel as they very distinctly stated, “Israel has sent a completely incompetent delegate to the UNHRC!” well, lagta hai kacha khiladi hai. All in all, the day was not a complete waste. The chaos took over the calm, but what else can we expect, after all, every delegate has an andaz apna apna!

The WHO committee had yet another unusual start. The Executive Board asked every delegate to raise their placard so the photographer could click a dhamakedar picture. Every delegate rocked different attire. Some wore sarees, some wore kurtas. One delegate even wore a lungi. The precious photoshoot acted like the calm before the storm as the crisis update was announced.

As the delegates already knew, Agent Joe Mama of the D.E.A. had found an anonymous white powder that killed three D.E.A. agents in Russia, Germany, and Saudi Arabia. However, it turned out that Agent Mama was a quadruple agent working for all four countries. As a result of his grave mistake, he was fired immediately and all of his further endeavours were halted. The response from Saudi Arabia and Canada however, was much harsher. They held Agent Mama, hostage, to which the USA responded by stating “We will escalate the situation if we have to.”.

Norway, Belgium, and Italy had sent intelligence agents to investigate the origin of this white powder and the results were shocking. It was a bioweapon developed in a lab! All of the delegates shouted out “Whaaaaaaaat?!” except one. China. Surprisingly suspicious.

This powder was life-threatening. After all, it killed ten people in Italy, four people in Belgium, and seven people in Norway. Sadly and unsurprisingly, the committee took a rather boring turn. After the SSL was revived, a few dry speeches were given and no relevant questions were asked until the clock struck 12.

The lights turned off. Darkness engulfed the room. And then, lights. Or actually, flashlights from the press team’s phone.

by Panav Nanda

Journalists flooded the room, protesting and shouting in unison, “WE WANT ANSWERS!” repeatedly. The delegates of the USA, China, and Canada (the “superpowers”) were blasted with questions on top of more questions. The delegate of the USA was asked if they wanted to repeat the years 2020 and 2021 due to this white powder.

The weak response was “We are making scientists investigate this disease”, to which he got slammed by the journalists. The Silencer had been silenced.

The delegate of China was interrogated; they said that they didn’t care about the Virus from the powder as the countries affected by it were way too far away from China. When questioned about the action of stopping all deliveries, Canada savagely responded, “Everybody gon’ respect the shooter, but the one in front of the gun lives forever”. After the delegates got grilled during the press conference, Australia was barred for calling the delegate of China a “ching-chong”.

“ WE WANT ANSWERS ! ”

The ensued a fiery 2v2 between China and Australia against the USA and Canada. USA boldly stated “China is that one boy that cries wolf when no one hears their cries for diplomacy” and, “China is the uno player that says ‘uno’ with 8 cards behind their back.”.

China got back at the USA by stating that “The United States- more like the best sugar daddy in the world” (ooooooooooooooooo’s echoed in the background).

The USA questioned the presence of Australia when he said, “I don’t know what Australia is doing here given that their only relevance to biowarfare is kangaroos.”

Australia was ready for this. The delegate savagely said, “When I walk back to my seat, at least I know where to go unlike Joe Biden”. After all this drama, the people still questioned whether the United States was a democracy or an idiocracy.

Kya Hum Saath Saath Hain?

A family that debates together stays together.

After the heinous death threats from communists the previous day, the ICC committee united under one metaphorically broken roof, like a real loving family. The Executive Board received an impressive sixty-two directives over that night, with more coming along. Some back and forth between Pranab Mukherjee and the EB about the state of the hospitalised Bal Thackeray later, the committee finally gained speed. We saw a taste of Ramkishan Chaturvedi and his constant nag for family-bonding, as Yogendra Narayan started targeting Sharad Pawar, demanding prosecution. His demand was met with an uproar of table banging and cheering, even from Pawar himself! The infamous man stood up, clarifying his previous statements, claiming that he believed in secularism.

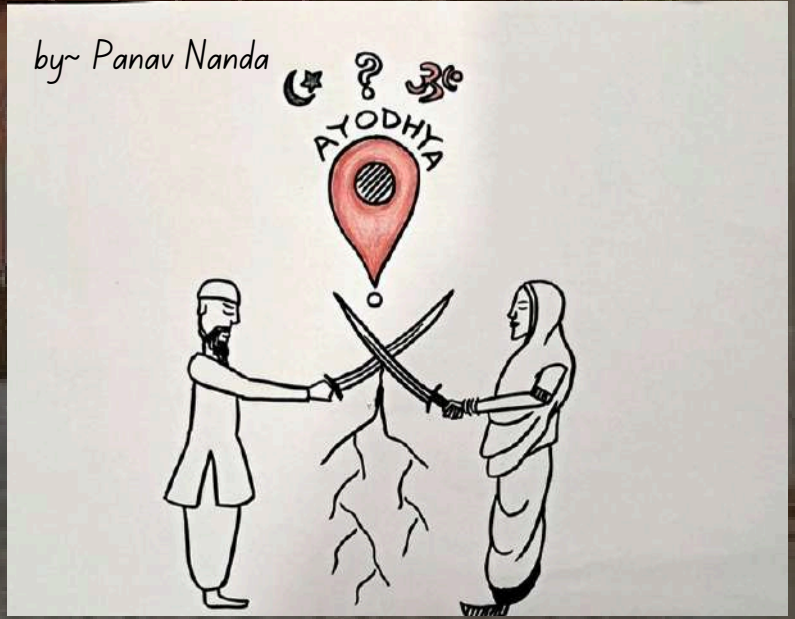

When we thought there was a family reunion at the door, a raging feud cloaked as a mob of hooligans screaming “Allah-hu-Akbar” entered the room. This was followed by a larger crowd of Shiv Sainiks screaming “Jai Shree Ram,” who quite literally picked up the former one. “Sharad Pawar hamara hai”, they said as they abducted him from the Chhatrapati Shivaji Terminal.

The Shiv Sainiks killed several Muslims in Dongri. While Bombay's ports were taken over and riots prevailed, there was no response from Bal Thackeray. The fuel to the already fiery committee came when Mulayam Singh dropped his phone for the fifth time, which begged the question; how would he handle the largest democracy if he could not handle a six-inch phone?

After a brief breakfast, some of the best delegates moved to the back of the room. This posed the question- were these distinguished members plotting something? After the abduction of Pawar, the focus shifted to Thackeray. In retaliation, the Shiv Sena leader spoke, "I don't care about the country! I care about my people!". In an attempt to put an end to all the prem, Pranab Mukherjee announced, "All religion should be deemed illegal, the country should bleed red; red with communism!". This provoked a flurry of questions from the delegates, with Kalyan Singh leading with the burning question, "Do you think taking away fundamental rights is a game?!". Mukherjee promoted armed violence in committee, with an astronomically controversial statement, "If you have a gun to your head, you will do exactly what you are told!".

As if the committee wasn't heated enough, a young Muslim student from Aligarh University, yelled in the face of the P.M, exclaiming "You simply deleted Muslims!". The situation continued intensifying after he left, when Pragya Thakur, a fervent Shiv Sena supporter, stormed into the committee, with veins popping on her forehead. She promoted the hindutva agenda, "Agar tum ek Hindu maaroge, hum sau Muslim maarengel".

"ARE YOU NOT THE SADAM HUSSAIN OF INDIA?" - SHARED PAWAR TO P.M. NARSIMHARAO

by Panav Nanda

Throughout the commotion, Pranab Mukherjee tried to push his communist strategy, to reunite India once again. Even Thakur rejected this atrocious idea. Manmohan Singh found his voice and got up to the dais. “Sir aap kya kar rahe ho? Kabhi Khudko sher bula rahe ho, kabhi chuhiya?!”, referring to Thackarey’s earlier comment about him being a “sher in a pinjra”.

After a hearty meal, the committee called in a crisis. Pawar was brought in, a cloth over his face and a lawyer by his side. He was tortured and dragged to the Yazdani Bakery. An open court would be held in public on the whims and fancies of Shiv Sena. If convicted, Pawar would share a cell with L.K. Advani, Owaisi, and Murli Manohar Joshi. It was found that RAW had been forced to suppress the newly found evidence. The agents that refused to cooperate were sent to hostile countries and excommunicated. At the tenth hour, Sharad Pawar was found not guilty and Narasimha Rao was penalised. To end it all, the P.M. blamed it all on Pakistan claiming that he was the bravest to tell an ace like it was.

Guess it wasn’t a happy family after all. They didn’t give us the picture-perfect ending; but was this something better altogether?

Dynamics ki daraar

BY SAANVI BHADANGE AND
SAARA MAITRA

February 24th, 1933. The committee faced the repercussions of the crises- the adoption of the Lytton Report and the withdrawal of Japan from the LON. They scrutinized Japan’s questionable decisions and China’s incompetence to govern Manchuria, much like a detective at a crime scene, except in this case, both the victims; Japan and China, had knives in their hands and stab wounds all over.

The Editorial Board initiated the committee by resuming the Special Speaker’s List. The delegate of Italy made a fair attempt at advocating for world peace by condemning Japan for its decisions regarding the invasion of Manchuria. However, after being questioned by the delegate of Portugal on its own questionable military choices, the delegate failed to provide a plausible answer. This exchange was interrupted by cross-talk between the delegates of UK, USSR and Japan, for which the EB banned them without hesitation.

After a few repetitive speeches and relatively dry questions, the EB entered into a Round Robin to bring some life to the drained delegates. Japan was the first to speak and claimed boldly that they would keep winning and burn China to the ground. “This committee is a joke,” said the delegate of Mexico, expressing his disapproval of the redundant arguments. The delegate of USA questioned what Japan was useful for but answered the question themselves, “Killing people.” Canada was in complete agreement, adding that “Japan was only ‘helping’ people by sending them to heaven.”

“This committee is trash but we are not,” yelled Japan, who was fuming with anger, as indicated by his bright red face. The delegate of UK stood up abruptly and cried, “Japan can’t see what they have done to the world because their eyes are too squinted,” which caused the entire committee to produce at least 200 decibels of noise.

Just then The President of the United States of America barged into the room, and the already chaotic committee was hit with another crisis. The President warned the delegates to be cautious of their reckless statements and threats of war. The delegate of Mexico took it upon himself to point out the hypocrisy of the committee. He stated that incompetence was present in every country and urged the delegates to “have some heart.” The delegate advocated for Manchuria to have the right to self-governance, which was disapproved by many.

The situation intensified when the British Prime Minister, Ramsay MacDonald, entered the conference, declaring that UK had bombed three Japanese ports as a consequence of Japan’s aggressiveness towards China. The delegate of Mexico compared the delegate of Japan to a “headless chicken running around aimlessly,” and advised him to engage in peace talk, which seemed to be the only end to their crisis. To mark the end of the committee, the delegate of UK rose animated once again and said four words to Japan’s face, “Small eyes, big mouth.” This caused the entire committee to break into an uproar of table-bangs and cheers.

by~ Mehek Jeelani

At that point, it was unclear who to blame- Japan? China? Or UK? Finally, like a movie that ran out of ideas and went with the most clichéd ending possible, the committee ended on a note of utter disappointment. Thus, the second day of The League of Nations was unfruitful, with no successful directives or resolutions passed.

George Bush, the president of the United States was the first one to silence the tense murmuring, as he called Saddam Hussain to the stand, and accused him of all the violent acts of terror he had propagated, whether it was blowing up the World Trade Centre in fiendish fury, or killing his own Iraqi people in cold blood, and stated that Iraq is manufacturing weapons of mass destruction, and if successful their terrorism would spread around the world. This was aptly answered, when Bush informed the ignorant Ramadan, that his assumptions were based on accurate CIA reports, based on Geiger counter readings, and asserted that a man as violent as Saddam Hussain was capable of any form of extremist activity, which was followed by fervorous cries of support Saddam Hussain finally approached the podium and recklessly called out the USA for "threatening everyone who

The silence following this speech was broken by Saddam Hussein himself. "Enough is enough!" said Hussein, "USA threatens everyone who questions their regime." The delegate, backed by deafening table bangs, stated that Iraq would go to any extent to protect its interests and prove USA's "baseless claims" false. With a conceited tone, Kofi Annan, the Secretary General of the United Nations, posed a rather uncertain question. Kofi Annan wondered how the radiation at the Al-Hillah base could be justified, "regardless of how it has been discovered." Sadam chuckled before aptly answering with the very basic fact that the radiation emitted could have been from the development of other chemical weapons, making it crystal clear that Iraq was not developing WMDs. To make more baseless accusations arrived the Polish President, Aleksander Kwaśniewski. Rather than condemning the violation of questions their regime,” and stated, “enough is enough!”. He then proceeded to say that Iraq would go to any extent to protect their interests. Kofi Annan, the secretary-general of the United Nations, enquired about the nature of the radiation detected from the Al-Hillah base. Perhaps digging his own grave, he claimed that the radiation might not be of WMDs but of some other chemical weapons. Pretty toxic, we’d say (pun intended!) Aleksander Kwasniewski, the president of Poland, followed Putin’s speech and caused chaos in the committee when he said “Iraq is nothing but a banana republic nation, in fact it is a stretch to even call it a nation.”. multiple UN charters, he recklessly called the state of Iraq “a banana republic,” causing chaos in committee. Tony Blair then took it upon himself to bring entertainment to the committee when he stated, “The Bengal Famine was the mistake of stupid Bengalis, why didn’t they just eat?” With that, the delegates and the editorial board definitely caught some comic relief in this action-packed thriller. Amidst this unsettling debate, another crisis broke out when Brian Burrige, UK’s military commander, misfired a stealth bomber, completely annihilating the Luberef Oil Rigs in Riyadh, instead of Al-Hillah. This brought about the death of 500 people, the loss of 120 million barrels of oil, and infinite shame.

captivating the committee, soon sent them into fits of laughter, stating, “The Bengal Famine was the mistake of stupid Bengalis, why didn’t they just eat?” Amidst this chaos, another crisis broke out when Brian Burrige managed to annihilate the Luberef oil rigs in Iraq, instead of the intended Al Hillah, causing a loss of 120 million barrels of oil and the death of 500 people. Even during this serious situation, the director of Mossad managed to get some laughs by constantly misgendering the President of France. Soon, Namiq assumed the role of orator and called out Western hypocrisy, saying, “Can you smell that?! Smells like Western hypocrisy!!”, while dramatically spraying perfume on himself. A good attempt at establishing his stance, but a subject of humour at best. Another crisis ensued, as Uday Hussain, Saddam Hussain’s son, was shot by the Americans in his own home. The Hussain family, enraged by this, took the rash

This seriousness was deviated by the Director of Mossad misgendering the President of France on multiple occasions, once again engulfing the committee in laughter. “Can you smell that?” asked Mohammed Namiq, shoving a bottle of perfume into his pocket. “It smells like Western hypocrisy.” Namiq shamed the United States of America for breaking numerous UN charters by tracking Saddam in foreign territories using the CIA. George Bush, unable to falsify this point, could only remain silent. Another crisis ensued as Uday Hussein, Saddam’s son, was shot by the Americans in his own home. The Husseins, enraged by this act, did not hesitate to put out the fire with fire and took George Bush’s family hostage. The situation intensified when the Director of ISIS, “Mr Abu goes boom boom,” entered the room with a bomb strapped to his chest.

decision of taking Bush's family hostage. The situation continued to intensify as the head of ISIS, "Mr Abu goes boom-boom" entered the room, with a bomb strapped onto his chest.

George Bush unfazed, declared that his death and his family's death were of no importance if he died fighting for democracy and freedom, and the extremists did not hesitate to pull the trigger, leaving Bush's family and empathy dead.

Finally, chaos ended, forever, as the benevolent delegates met their ends to Mr. Abu goes boom boom.

George Bush, accepting defeat, displayed his indifference to the well-being of his family and the entire committee by declaring that their deaths would not be in vain, as they would die fighting for democracy. As a result, the Iraqi extremists wasted no time in shooting Bush's family, leaving them lifeless on the ground. Finally, chaos ended, forever, as the benevolent delegates met their ends to Mr. Abu goes boom boom.
